If you have to do some development of the key macros you need a development environment. In this lab we have created a development environment with Visual Studio. The solution is composed by 2 projects: one Project contains the data source, one projects is the task and the last one the result project. When this project is build the development environment is built too. If you execute the.exe file it will start a Visual Studio instance which will start the development environment. Click on "File", "New", "Project" and select the project type: We have the choice between creating a project with and without "Unit tests". In this lab we will use the former one: Developers should have the ability to inspect the production code, unit tests and the tests' code in the same environment. In this lab we will also show how to create environments for each of them. We can now select the solution configuration: After that we can choose to build the solution configuration: Configuration and build is automatic. When the solution is build the “Add Reference” dialog is shown: Add reference button is at the bottom of the “Add Reference” dialog. It will add the references from the solution to the “Development project”: When the solution is build the “Clean All” dialog is shown: You may notice the yellow ellipses in the output window. This means that the build failed. This is not a problem, the “Build Error Reporting” dialog is shown: Double click on the ellipsis and you will see the build error details: We can open the error in Visual Studio to inspect the error: In this case the message is something like “Create failed for project ‘NameOfProject’, Error: ‘target_name’ attribute cannot have more than one value.” If we go to the “Project” menu and select “Build” the “Clean All” dialog will be shown again. To finish the development environment is created we will create a test project with the sample code from the examples folder: By default when a solution is built all the projects contained in the solution will be built too. If you just want to build only the projects you need to use the option “Build Selected projects” from 1d6a3396d6
